Repairing Broked Limbs.

The repair of boken limbs of farm ani male has been shown to be an easy operation. All that is required is to put the animal-if a large one -in alinge, to bring the fracture into proper position, and then blod the limb with bandages dipped in common plaster of peris paste. The band age Is made in the form of a roll, by sew ing the ends together in a long strip and winding this around the limb in the usual nianner. The limbs of entail animals may he repaired by enveloping them la wetted straw board, fitting It to the Ilmb carefully and then hinding a common bandaga over it. And now it has been discovered that brokau timbs and stems of trees may be to paired in a similar way, bringing the frac tured parts together, setting a stake firmly in the ground and fastening the tree to It, or hinding a splint upon the limb, after having neatly covered the wound with graftlog wex - [New York Times.

Gov. Knott is drawing the fire of the press by reason of some of his recent pardone. Not feeling disposed to shoot at the good natured Governor to-day, The Times would auggest that some of ble critics fire a broadside at those Judges and juries who convict criminals and straliway sign a pe tition to the Governor for pardon. Not once in a month, but daily, la this done, as any one can learn by irquiry at the Exacutive office. Notblog more readily arous ed the writh of Gov. Blackhir , then the reception of auch a petition, and the assurephere in his office sometimes assumed a inrid tipt as he expressed his opinion of Judges and juries "who thrust their duties upon him." KEEP THE CELLAR WARM .- A cheap and very effective way, to raise the icm perature in a cellar that Is dangerously near the freezing point is to set one or more common kerosene lamps on the cellar hottom during the daytime, when not wanted for lighting the rooms above. We bave all noticed how much warmer a living room is in the evening, when the ismpe are burning, than in the daytime with the same amount of fire in the stove or furnace All the heat from a burning lamp is retain ed in the apariment. Twenty five cents' worth of kerosene oil will throw out a surprising amount of heat, and in many cares it would be the chespest means for keeping a cellar from freezing during the passage of an extra cold wave .- [New England Farm

FASHIONS IN GHOSTS.

Spooks Have Learned to Adapt Themacises to Modern Environments.

[London Globe.] Of course, ghosts, like all else, have bad to be adapted to their present environment The ghost of the nineteenth is very unlike the ghost of the sixteenth century. For one thing, ghosts are no longer limited in their hours of "waiking." They have considerably more liberty, as is only natural in these days. They are no more bound at cock-crow ter "shrink in haste away, and vanish from our They no longer, "in habit as they lived," "with solemn march go slowly and atately by"; and they no longer restrict their appearance to great occasions, when weighty words of warning or advice are needful. The motorn ghost has been developed into a much less aubstantial and a much less reasonable being than its ancestors. It is sometimes reduced to a mere voice, or even to a message conveyed without a voice, or to a shadowy hant or dim vision floating vaguely in the air at a dark seance And too often for their ghostly reputation's sake the communications made by these pseudogliosts are bianely foolish, pointless, and useless. The robust, matter of fact, oldfashioned ghosts who hannted country houses and country lanes, and scared the children and mall servants, and territled all the villagers with guilty consciences are hopelesdy out of dat. The lovely lady who wandered up and down fonely corriders perpetually wringing her hanfs-the bleeding body carrying its ewn ghastly head-ail tho murdered victims "shaking their gory locks," or stalking s demuly as the ghost of "buried Denmark"—most majestical of ghosts until ble message was delivered -are fast vanishing, even from the Christmas stories.

Instead of these old friends, we have now a bewlidering and provoking tribe of apparltions, only haff real ghost and half idea. We have spiritualistic manifestations, new and occult powers and mysteries enough, but all aupposed to be scientifically explicable. Now a natural and common place explanation is the ruln of a good ghost story. When we have turned down the lights, and prepared for a delightful thriff of horror, one does not want one's ghost to be explained away; one feels cheated when the "true ghost story" is only an account of a flashy apparition, which comes in a stupid kind of way to announce its own death; and one feels positively in jured when it is explained by a scientific description of brain waves and transmitted Ghosti, we sadly fear, have had their day or night. Now that they are so carefully discussed, they will certainly die out. For discussion destroys credulity, and when no one believes any more in ghosts no one will ever again we a gir set.

He Wrote Too Hapitly.

[Arkansaw Traveler.] "Colonel," said the new "local" of a small daily paper, looking up from his desk and addressing the editor, 'the great trouble with American writers is hurry. We dash off a thing which should receive hours of talk well, for our hearers do not expect w to deliver polished sentences; but in writing it is different. When I decided to take up life should be devoted, I resolved never to turn off a bad piece of writing. Some of our greatest writers have worked for days upon sentences which afterwards proved to le simple. Now, I have been at work for son. time on a sentence here, and have at last re-cooks in them." "Ob, no, of course not," replied the young man. "But, by the way you have expressed yourself, people are fed to infer that this column—the one in which the notice appears -has a cook and that another cook i wanted in another column. I am sorry to see that in this, your first attempt as a journalist, you have fallen into the per-nicious habit of writing too rapidly. You must not dash it off in this way. It is dangerous to your future success. Go away on the sentence on the broad page of your mind until it is entirely covered with characters. Then turn your mind over and write on the other side. After you have completed the work, sit down on a reck and wait until i cail you. Good morning, sir. Yes, the sun is shining beautifully to-day. Good morn-

DARK DAYS. BY HUGH CONWAY.

Author of "Called Back."

Noisriessly I undid the massive studded wooden gate, which at night time closed the entrance to the putio. Unseen, we stepped into the shady, narrow street. Our luggage was light. I could carry it with ease to the station, which was only a short distance off.

We were there only too soon. We had to wait some time ere the train, which, following the example of the true Spanlard, decines on any consideration to to fourfied, made its appearance. We took our seets in silence. At last the dignified train condescended to move onward. We sat side by eithe, and gazed and gazed in the direction of the heaville life in the beautiful side. direction of the beautiful city from which we were flying; gazed until we saw the very last of it, until even the great towering Giralia was lost to view. Then, and only then, I think we fully realized to what end we were speeding.

The next three days and uights seem now little more to me than a whirling stream. On and on we went to work out our fate, over the same ground which I had traversed, with scarcely less agitated feelings, some months 170. I ground my teeth when I thought how little my strenuous and seemingly successful efforts had avalled. Now, not from any omission of presention; not because the law compelled, not by the exercise of force; but simply on account of the great dictum of right and wrong, we were,

of our own accord, retracing our steps to face the danger from which we had fled. Oh, bitter irony of destiny!

What was money to me now? Nothing but so much dross! It could do one thing, only one, that gold which I lavished so freely on that journey. It could assure that Philippa and I might travel alone. It could give us privacy for the time that journey lasted, that was nil! lasted, that was nill

Yet although alone, we spoke but little. Our thoughts were not euch as can be expressed by words. Her hand in mine, her head on my shouller-sleeping when we could sleep, waking and looking into each other's faces—knowing that every mile of sunny or starlit country over which we passed brought us rearer to the end. Ali! I understoo! then how it is that lovers who are menacel by some grent sorrow can kill themselves, and lie smiling in each other's arms! We might have done so; but our deaths would have left to perish that stranger whom we were speeding to save. So, as in a iream, the hours, the days, the nights, went by. We might have been traveling through the fairest scenary in the world, or through the most arid desert. I scarcely froubied to glance out of the carriage window. The world for me was init was after we left Paris-Paris, which to-day seemed almost within stone's throw of London-that i aroused myself and bracel my energies to discuss finally with Philippa our proper plan of action. I felt that my right course would be to go etraight to some solicitor, tell the tale, and ask him to put matters in train. But I could not bring myself to do this. Our secret was as yet our own. our own. Moreover, through the misery of those hours, one ray of hope had broken upon mo. If Philippa could be brought to yield to my guidance, to follow my instructions, it was not beyond the bounds of possibility that we might be saved, and saved with clean hands with clean hands.

"Denrost," I whispered, "to-night wo shall be in London."

And at lier fingers tightened on mino. "And at Townhani?" she said. "We shall be in it was long before she yielded. The thought of a fellow-creature lying in prison, perheps for months, and lo-morrow to at and in shame before his judges, on account of a deed which she herself had done, was anguish to her nobio nature. Then growing desperate at seeing the only plank which could save us from wreck spurned for the sakoof in my present mood, I was able to believe too fluely strained a scruple, I used my last nucl, as I rightly judged, my most powerful argument. I told her that it would be not only she who would suffer for that unconscious act, but that I, her husband, must pay the ponaity due from an accessory after the Hoavest forgive me for the anguish my words caused that loving heart! Philippa, on whom the intelligence of my danger fell like a thunderbolt, early back in her seat, paic and trombling. Had I over doubted that my wife's heart-whole love was my own that look would have dispelled the doubt. She prayed and besought me to leave her at the next station; to let her finish the journey and make her avewal alone. My reply was short, but sufficiently long to put all hope of my consenting to such a course out of her head. Then, for my sake, she yielded.

On one condition—one only," she said.
"Be guided by me in this. In all else you shall do as you like."
"I must be in the court, Basil. I must hear the trial. If the worst happen, there there was a manner than must not be the delay of a moment; then and there I must prociaim the truth."

atons for his anguish at hearing himself condemned to death for a crime he knows nothing of. I must be there. Promise me I shall be there, and for your sake I will do as you wish.

It was the best concession I could get. I romised. I concealed the fact that if, when sentence was pronounced, a woman rose in the body of the court, and asserted the prisoner's innocence and her own guilt, the probabilities were ahe would be summarily ejected. This made no difference. Let i hillippa be silent; let the man be found not guilty, and the next train could bear us

Yes, even now there was hope!

CHAPTER XIV.

We reached Charing Cross at 4 o'clock on the morning of September 30. The first train by which we could get to Tewnham was timed to leave Liverpool street at soven, so that we had an hour or two to spare for such refreshment as we cared to take, such rest as we dared to allow ourselves. What with the fatigue of continuous travel, and the dread of what this day was to bring forth, it may be easily believed that we were thoroughly worn out. We were, indeed, more fitted to go to bed and sleep for a week than to proceed upon the last stage of our diame journey. THE CRIMINAL COURT.

But there was no help for it. If we meent lo be in time we must go on by the early morning train. I begged my wife to lie down, and endeavor to anatch an hour's sleep. She refused firmly. Much of that calm which had characterized her since the moment when I broke the fatal news to her had vanished. Its place was now taken by an excitement, suppressed, but nevertheless clearly manifest to my eyes. The fear that we should not reach Tewnham in tima for the trial seemed to haunt her unceasingly. It was for this reason she so p-remptorily refusel to lie down and court sleep. She feared jest, our eyes once cicsed, we should, feared lest, our eyes once cicsed, we should, from sheer exhaustion, sleep for hours, and no miss the morning train. She was ever picturing the horror of that poor unknown picturing the horror of that poor unknown man being led from the dock, with the death sentence ringnig in his ears. So the time which elapsed before we started for Tewnham we spent in the hotel. I bespice tooms by telegram, sent when we reached folkestone. We made an apology for a meal; in fact, what we could get at that time of night was of itself little more than apology. We sat all but silent, watching the hands of the clock, which told us how fast the procious moments were passing away. We saw the gray morning atruggle away. We saw the gray morning atruggle with, and at last conquer, the yellow gas-light. We heard the hum of traffic growing louder and louder in the streets below us. Theu we turned to riske what may be rightly called our last tdieus. Who could say that to-day my who and I might not be parted forever!

While at the ho. of I tried to obtain the file of the Times, i wanted to look back and see if i could flud the account of magisand see it is could not the account of magisterial proceedings against this unlocky William Evans. He must, of course, have appeared before the tesser tribunal, and could I see the account of his appearance I should be able to judge as to the strength of the case against tim. But the file was not forthcoming. Parkays it did, not exist, we have coming. Perhaps it did not exist; perhaps the sleepy eyed. Tentonic water did not understant what I wanted; so, etill in the dark as to why suspicion should have fallen upon this this innocent men, we left the hotel and drove to Liverpoui street etation.

At 9 o'clock our journey was ended. We stood on the platform of Townham railway atosi on the platform of Townham railway atation. My poor wife wore a thick black veil, so her free I could not see; but i knew it was as pale as death. Now and again her hand, which rested on my arm, pressed it convulsively. I think we were the most uniance pair on the earth!

We were even denied the time for any were even denied the time for any more farewells or expressed regrets. The ficur was chiming from the old cathedral tower. The business of the courts, I knew, aiways began at 10 o'clock, and considering the crowd which would most surely be at tracted by so interesting a case as this trial for murder committed so many months ago, or murder committed so many months ago, if felt sure that unless we proceeded at once to the Shirchall our chance of galuing entrance would be but a small one. I field one of the close cabs which were waiting outside the station.

As I did so I felt a heavy hand laid upon my shoulder and heard a rich, pleasant-sounding and not unfamiliar voice exclaim,

"Basil North, as I'm a sinner."

That any one should nt this moment address Basil North in a merry way seemed a positive incongruity. I turned around almost angrily, and found myself face to face whit an old friend. He was a barrister name of Grant's man four or they was a partister. named Grent; a man four or live years my senior, but one with whom, before I for swere the society of my fellow-man, I had been on intimate terms. I had not seen him for a considerable time; but had heard, casually, that he was making great strides

In his forenaic career.

In spite of my distress I returned his greeting and grasped his hand warmly. After all it seemed a relief to find that I had a friend left in the world. What brings you here?" I asked.

"The only thing that could bring me to such a place—circuit work. I have an important case on to-day. That's the worst of a place so near Lomion as this one. One s tempted to spend the nights in town which means getting up at an unholy hour in the morning. But you! Why are you here! I heard you were as rich as Midas, and living abroad in luxury."
"I have been abroad for some time.

"But what brings you to this sleepy old lown!' continued Grant. I hesitated for a moment. Then, thinking that truth, or at least half truth, was the best, told him I had come down to witness the trial for murder. "I should doubt your getting into court," said. "The morbid interest excited around about hore is, I am told, very great. The sheriff is besieged by applications for 'Couldn't you help mei The fact is,

"I don't think I can," said (frant. "Does your—the lady wish to go with you;"

"My cousin—yee," I said seeing that he expected an introduction. He raised his tent and made some courter.

hat and made some courteous and pleasant romark, to which Philippa, to my surprise, replied in a calm and fitting way.

Grant knew I had no sister. I called her cousin because I had a wild hope that, if the worst happened, I might be able to conceal the true relationship in which we steed the true relationship in which we stood, and so be permitted to give evidence on her behalf. I trusted my wife would guess that had a good reason for this daception. Try and manage this for me, Grant," I further demur.

'Take me in your cab, and I will see what During our drive to the Shirehall I asked Grant what he knew about the impending trial.

"Nothing," he said, frankly. "I hate murder cases—hate even to read about them. Of course I know that Sir Marvyn Perraud was killed and hidden in the anow for days and days. But I know no more."

"Whie is the accused?"

"I don't know. I thought, from your anxlety, you must know him."

"Will he be found guilty?"

"I don't know. Stay, I heard some one who ought to be well informed say yesterday that the case for the prosecution was day that the case for the prosecution was most feeble. He seemed to doubt if the grand jury would return a true bill."

As I heard this I pressed Philippa's hand secretiv. I felt that she was trembling.
The drive to the Shirehall occupied only few minutes. We did not go to the public entrance, in front of which I could see a crowd of people nearly blocking up the street. We stopped at another door, and Grant, after looking around, caught sight of what appeared to Lo an inspector of police.

the outered into a little conversation with him, the result of which was that we were given into his care.

'This is a breach of the law,' whispered my friend as he tade me good-bye. 'You will have to atone for it by a handsome will have to atone for it by a handsome gratuity."

We followed our guide. Philippa, although walking with a firm step, leaned heavily upon my arm. I scarcely know by what door we entered that palace of justice. The stalwart policeman led us through stone corridors and passages, which rechoed with the tread of our feet, and at last we found ourselves before a double awinging plain oak door, over which in old English letters was written "Criminal Court."

I felt Philippa shudder, and knew that the sight of those words brought the horror of the situation fully home to her. Machanically I pressed a sovereign in the hand of the venial inspector, or whatever he was; then, holding my wife's hand. I passed through the noiseless swinging door into the

Two or three people, who had no doubt gained admittance in the same way as we had done, were sealed in various coignes of vautage. I led Philippa up the broad steps, and pointed toone of the hard wooden benches provided for the accommodation of the general public. These benches were raised step by step, one abova another. See, the clock under the balcony marks half-past nine. The all but deserted cour legins to assume the appearance of proparing for business. Policemen and other officials pass to and fro, some arrangin papers, some replenishing ink-botties, and placing quili pens ready for the harristers and solicitors who will acon fill those front seats. Some one, with what seems to mubitter irony, places a magnificent bouquet of flowers on either hand of the judge's vacant chair. What have flowers is common with such a scene as this! Flowers, too, which are beautiful enough to recall to which are beautiful enough to recall to my mind the fair Spanish home, which maybe, we shall see no more. Flowers in this dan of sorrow! Rather should every neat, every beam, he draped in black.

Now the doors of each aide of the rour Now the doors of each aide of the rour open, and romain open. I hear a shuffling of many feet. People, in a continuous stream, pass through the entrance, and wend their way to the portion of the court allotted to the general public. So fast, as thick they come, that in ten minutes this space is through almost to suffocation. Phillippa and I present closer and closer to each other as a very inchest, the langer of the state of the s each other, as every inch of the bench of which we are seated is appropriated. The Crowded by respectable-looking, well dreased people, who have gained admission as i heard, by favor of the sheriff. Yet respectable as they are, each man, each woman, rushes in eagerly and strives for the best available seat. And for what reason? To see and hear a poor wretch trier for his life! In my litter mood I look with hate on these sensation asskers i hate they hate on these sensation asekers. I hate then even more when I think that their morbic craving for excitement may be satisfied with such food as they little expect; and I clined my teeth as I picture the seene at that me ment when I'hllippa, in pursuance of he immovable resolution, rls.s, and makes her inimovable resolution, risis, and makes her effort to proclaim her own gullt and the convicted man's innocence. Although alrive to force the picture from my mind by telling myself that justice cannot err, that the man will be acquitted, yet agair and again the dread of the worst seless me, and I hate every face in that crowd, which may, by and by, be gaping, with looks o wonder and curiosity, at the woman I love. As in a haze I see some faces which are familiar to me. A number of gentione enter and seat themselves on the benches which counsel usually occupy. Some few of these I know by sight. They are country which counsel usually occupy. Some few of these I knew by sight. They are country gentlemen from the neighborhood of Rod gontletten from the neighborhood of Rolling, who are now called to serve on the grand july. I see also the thin-faced, hawk ish-looking woman who calls herself Mra Wilson. I am thankful that she takes seat if front of us and does not see us. Sh like ourselves, must know that an innocen man is this day about to be tried. So for half an hour I sit, gazing now at the crowd of people, now at the ampty doci and vacant bench in front of me; listening and vacant bench in front of me; listeniul ing to the hum of voices which rises from the packed court; longing for the momen: to come when this dreadful suspense may end; yet all the same dreading and willing to put off that moment. And all the whill Philippa, in her black garb, close to manul unseen by our neighbors, holding my hand Hush! The door at the back of the bench opens, and at tea o'clock to the minute the black-robed judge appears. He bows to the court, seats himself, and by his action algnifies that he is ready to begin the business o' flee that he is ready to begin the business of the day. No trembling prisoner in the dock ever scanned the judge's face with more anxiety than I scan his fordship's at this present moment. An old man, too old, it seems to me, for auch a responsible post; au anniable, pleasant looking man-not, I venture to think, one who can bear the reputation of being a "hanging judge." I breathe a prayer that he may this day be able to direct aright the course of justice.

Hush! Hush! Silence in the court! my poor, awest wife, let me grasp that man i yet closer, for the moment which for days and nights has never been absent from our minds has come! What will it bring us !

CHAPTER XV.

THE BLACK CAP. There is allence, or all but silence, in the court. The buzz of suppressed conversation sinks almost to nothing—absolutely to noth ing as the judge's marshal rises, and after gabbiing through the mysterious proclama-tion which begins "Oyez! Oyez! Oyea!" da clares the court open.

l'hilippa, still closely veiled, sits like a statue. Her hand, which ever graspe mine, scarcaly responds to the pressure by which again and again I endeavor to bid her hope for the lest. I would give much if ever now I could get her to consent to my lead ing her away. I dare not auggest this, I know that doing so would be waste of words. The court is open. The red judge is perusing letters and papers which ite in front of him as calmiy and unconcernedly as it the life's happiness of, at least, one man and woman did not greatly depend upon the view he takes of the case about to be tried. He raises one of his bouquets and inhales the perfume of the flowers. I low can one in his position behave like an ordinary mortality was we not have be upint. Were we not here he might condemn an innocent man to a shamoful death! I wonder if, with such horrible responsibility resting on him, a judge can evar really be a happy
